- 1/2 tsp sugar
- 1 tsp yeast
- 1 tsp olive oil
- 1/2 tsp salt
- 1 cup bread flour

Instructions

1. Mix warm water with yeast and sugar, leave for a few minutes to bloom.
2. Add oil and salt, then mix in flour. Fold dough into ball, then move to an oiled container to ferment in the fridge for a day to a week.
3. Remove dough from container and press into an oiled skillet. Go a bit up the edges of the pan to allow it to contract a bit as it rises for ~30 minutes.
4. Cook dough in skillet without any toppings or sauce until the bottom is browned as much as you like, usually a few minutes.
5. Remove from heat and add sauce, cheese, and any other toppings. I used 1/3 cup of pasta sauce made with onions and tomatoes from the garden, mixed with a teaspoon of sugar and a tablespoon of olive oil. For the cheese, I used monterey jack, but low fat mozzarella would be less greasy.
6. Cook under the broiler on high for 5-10 minutes, until the cheese is melted and browned.
7. Carefully remove from pan and place on a cooling rack. Let it cool a few minutes before cutting into it.

ter to cover top of jars with an inch of water.

(d) Dry off jars and set aside to cool.

6. If not sealing, just put in the refrigerator, and they will be ready in 24 hours. They will stay good for several months.
